INDIVIDUAL ESSAY 2

In a dynamic environment like FPT University, skills in organizing events and presenting in front of crowds are essential and regular. It directly affects your results as well as your global integration process. After the recent visit to FSoft, I have improved many skills and knowledge related to the stages of event organization and persuasive presentation.

I also acquired quite a few skills to plan and organize events effectively:

The first is to define the event goal. The issue to be discussed is the core of the meeting, the chairperson mainly relies on this factor to develop a plan for the meeting. Meetings with a clear purpose encourage attendees because they need to know what it's about. A specific example is that we also have specific goals for the F-soft tour, the orientation to be achieved for each class when participating in the extracurricular session.

The second factor is meeting time and weather. Meeting time must be reasonable so that guests attending the meeting feel comfortable. Weather is also an important factor, no one wants to attend an event while it's raining. The F-soft tour took place on a rainy day, having to travel a long distance by motorbike in such weather conditions makes it difficult and sometimes unmotivated to join.

The third factor is about the space of the event. Attending a meeting is also an opportunity for people to meet each other. And in order for everyone to feel comfortable, it is important to consider the location where the meeting is planned. Choose a venue that is large enough for the number of participants. If the room is too big or too formal or too small, it also affects the concentration of the attendees.

And finally, do not forget to plan the content such as: plan the meeting content, detailed timeline, attendees. These are essential elements for an event to go as intended and to avoid mishaps. Making projections for possible scenarios is also a way to ensure the quality of the meeting. The F-soft tour was prepared by you with questions for those who are working in the field they pursue. This makes the tour even more meaningful.

Besides measuring, we also learned about persuasive presentation.

First, always focus on the main content you want to convey. That's what the audience is most interested in. Note: Just clarifying opinions, not telling long stories. Lead your listeners, show them why you believe what you're saying. Don't say what you think. Let the audience choose and decide for themselves. We heard Mr. Tan talk about the formation process, departments as well as career prospects for FPT students here. These are the things that most of the students at the event were interested in.

Second, make the listener the main character: No one is interested in hearing stories that have nothing to do with them. On the contrary, if you use familiar images, close to the listener, they will be easily convinced.

Third, expressive language also plays a very important role. It's not the words or sentences that you say, it's the way you say it, that will convince people. When affirming something, don't use the structure "I think..." because your statement will lack persuasiveness by 60%.

Your goal is to convince, to make the audience feel satisfied and fully agree with what you have to say. absolutely do not express your opinion subjectively. No one wastes time sitting around for hours listening to you talk about your thoughts.

Do not lull the listener with a flat voice, but instead, it must be a loud, strong, accented voice, rising and falling at the necessary passages for emphasis. You can repeat what has been presented but with different expressions to remind and not cause boredom.

The trip to FPT Software left many impressions on me, especially helping me to gain more skills in many fields. We hope that we will be able to participate in many more extra-curricular activities to further improve ourselves and keep good memories in our 4 years of university.
