Question:

3. On the same network news Web site you used for Exercise no. 2, view a video reporting a news event (as opposed to a commentator's commentary). Do you feel that the reporter's approach conveys a point of view, or is it neutral? Explain your feelings and discuss with your classmates.

After watching the videos on the website of exercise #2, we feel that reporters often express neutral rather than personal views. Why?

Because: their role is to provide information to interviewees and viewers, not to delve into the issue like commentators. so they don't have to express their feelings about those issues. moreover, they keep a neutral point of view in order to somewhat sympathize with the guests, and at the same time not to influence or controversy in public opinion. In addition, it also helps us not to distinguish between consensus and dissent, so reporters often stay neutral when reporting on content or news that causes sensation or not.

So how to take the neutral side ? We have 5 things to follow:

1. Keep your language neutral and not overly aggressive on some issues while being very negative on others.

2. Keep your sources trustworthy and not from biased organizations. For example, the association of LGBT people will be biased, and those who protect the LGBT community will be protective.

3. Keep your perspective varied. For example, in an issue, it is necessary to look from many different directions: for example, from the perspective of the victim, or the prisoner...

4. Keep your audience's opinions in mind. Not everyone will agree with every point of view or source of evidence, but the variety of your speech will have a lot to offer for everyone. Many people, many perspectives

5. Remember what you stand for: your work or yourself.

If the reporter does not take the neutral side but puts his or her point of view in the content, it will be easy to be boycotted, protested or controversial.

For example, there are 2 TV stations:

In a situation where the father is sick, his son goes to work to earn money

The first TV news was: The son went to earn money for his father's treatment

The second television reported: The son only cares about making money and does not take care of his father when he is sick.

=> Causes damage to the reputation of the business party as well as the morale of the characters in the news.
